With 20 years' experience in architectural lighting, Matt has contributed to a number of the region's most notable architectural developments.

Today, Matt's role at ERCO focuses on the role of light in community buildings and outdoor spaces. From transport hubs and universities to public realm applications, this cluster poses particular demands on light. The structures often have unusual details and dimensions, and their audiences are often large and unfamiliar with their surrounds. The effective application of light helps to welcome and guide people effortlessly and safely through these spaces, and provides a sense of purpose to each site.

Matt is passionate about the role lighting design principles play in creating public spaces – indoor and outdoor – that are user-friendly, safe and efficient. Of course, with the public purse at stake, Matt is also conscious of cost of ownership and sustainability and is committed to helping educate stakeholders to achieve the best outcomes.

Matt presents workshops, webinars and project tours on Light for Public Buildings and Light for Outdoor Spaces, and on various campaign topics designed to improve lighting applications in specific contexts.
