With fifteen years' experience in architectural lighting in Sydney, Matt has contributed to a number of the city's most notable recent architectural developments.

Today, Matt's role at ERCO focuses on the role of light in public spaces and community buildings. From transport hubs to education complexes, this Cluster poses unusual demands on light. The structures often have unusual dimensions, their audiences are potentially large and often unfamiliar with their surrounds. Effective lighting helps create identity, welcome and guide those visitors, and enhance the purpose of the site.

Matt is passionate about the role lighting design principles play in creating public spaces – indoor and outdoor – that are user-friendly and efficient. Of course, with the public purse at stake, Matt is also super conscious of economy and sustainability, committed to education and the use of fit-for-purpose tools to achieve the best outcomes.

As well as specifying projects and building the ERCO reputation, Matt presents workshops and project tours on the Language of Light, Light for Public Buildings and Dark Sky fundamentals.
